

The future of period-end

What high-performing professional services firms do differently

The struggle with period-end (monthly or quarterly) financials

Accounting and FP&A teams continue to face significant challenges in building clarity and control into their period-end processes. New Unit4 research reveals the key obstacles professional services firms encounter and their impact on morale, productivity, and profitability.

The numbers speak for themselves

The human cost

Interestingly, only 30% of respondents identified resource constraints as a challenge, highlighting that disconnected, legacy systems are the real culprits behind inefficiencies.

What finance teams need

When asked which tools would alleviate the workload of period-end financial reporting, respondents prioritized:

The case for automation

The solution

Flexible, integrated tools that automate processes, consolidate data across systems, and provide real-time tracking capabilities are the key to alleviating the pain of period-end processes.

Discover how Unit4 helps professional services firms reduce manual workloads, consolidate financial data, and improve team collaboration.
